

PROTEST AGAINST MILITARISM

Woodworth, Ohio, Feb. 15, 1915.
Editor Dispatch:—Last week, in his Youngtown lecture, Mr. Irvin Cobb, the well known war correspondent, expressed the opinion, if he is correctly quoted, that "peace can only be the good fortune of a country that is prepared for war." There is no present day subject so close to the heart of the world's peoples as peace and if you will bear with me, I can not resist the temptation of bringing to your attention a few reflections upon this matter, albeit I know full well that my views are not the views of one entitled to express them and in particular are they not the views of our late, and by some lamented, president, one of whom, by the way, is now sitting up an apple tree not chucking over much.

We will all agree that peace is the present sumum bonum; we will severally disagree as to the means of obtaining and maintaining it. The world is where it is today because of war, just as truly as it is not where it ought to be today because of war. Really, war has never bolstered up civilization; it is civilization's bane, a sort of appendix in the body civil. If we are civilized, it is in spite of war, and war exists because we are not fully civilized. The nations of the earth have written its history in war and carnage and untold suffering; they have always been prepared for war in a sense, although not always on the great scale that Mr. Cobb, in the light of the present Titanic war, probably had in mind when he expressed the thought above. And it would, therefore, appear to me that the lesson of history is, if you prepare for war, you must expect war. It is my observation that what men expect to happen, they usually prepare themselves for, and I am strongly of the belief that, as applied to war, my theory, if it is a theory, historically is borne out.

Mr. Cobb's theory has been the slogan of the militarists for several decades, and it has worked out very beautifully, has it not? It seems as though if proof of a theory were sought, it should be a proof that would prove the theory. It is too much like stopping the drink habit by keeping a glassful in the hand all the time. If the way to resume is to resume, the way to stop is to stop. No man has ever yet successfully prepared himself for heaven by living daily in an inferno.

There is no argument about the horrors of war. It is a fact and a blamed sight more. Men, strangely enough, have the physical courage to participate in war and brave its dangers yet they seem to lack the mental and moral courage to place it where it belongs. War is a moral question and must be met as are all moral questions, first, in the individual and second, in the nation. And so the question is, how is the general and universal prevalence of peace, among the so-called civilized nations at least, to be secured and maintained?

It does seem to be a very discouraging question, not that the solution is difficult of finding, but because of the difficulty in getting the people to accept the solution. When divine love comes fully into the heart of mankind, then will war and all of its hand-maidens of evil go out. The ideas are too diametrically opposed to harmonize and the strongest idea is bound, some day, to prevail, for it is the Divine plan. The love that I speak of is something that must come from within man and from above him. It is that state of thought, which accords God and man their right and relative place on the earth and in their relations with each other, God with man, man with God and man with man.

This is the substance of the teaching of the Son of Man. He was a man of peace and He suffered because others were not men of peace. Just as the world suffers today. Does not love result in peace? Does love not give life or does it destroy it? Love makes for purity everywhere, it means service, and it gives hope. Does war? All of the teaching and wisdom in the book, if epitomized, can be anything but love? And if love rules the hearts of men and the arms of nations, can there be war?

Love is the greatest thing in the world, and the greatest force. It is more potent than armies or money, if allowed to rule and govern all things. The cause of war is lack of love. Strife can not dwell with love. Money can not buy love and love never results from war. Can you buy sympathy? Yet love always gives it, and more; it gives its all, which is all. Money, and armies, will procure you many things but not all, and in the procuring, our money and our arms are dissipated. On the other hand love grows with the procuring and procures more and more. It will save in life and in death and love is peace.

Selfishness is lack of love and is the chief cause of all of our miseries, whether private or national. Selfishness devalues the heart and paralyzes the mind. It embitters nations and mauls the fist that should be extended on good fellowship; it leads to war, it makes war, it feeds war, it is the arch-enemy of love; it causes nations to regard each other as rivals, it inveighs them into territorial expansion and aggrandizement, it strikes a death-blow to progress, leaders of peace and brings devastation and despair in its wake. How supreme is love! War is a cancer which is eating out its own heart.

It is not to be expected that the philosophy of love shall suddenly gain the ascendancy over the hearts of men or the rulers of nations. Congressmen Gardner, of Massachusetts, and ardent ardent advocate, takes the position that this result can not happen in our generation. Why not? The world has been talking, as does Mr. Gardner, for centuries and this very attitude of thought has tended to postpone the coming of that Great Day when love shall rule, and the world plan. Shall we expect peace to rule and in the meantime be preparing for, and consenting to, war? It is supremely absurd.

Great nations are nations of peace. The greatness of the United States as a world power today can be ascribed to no other cause than to peace and to what peace permits. And while it is a fact that, if a state of war existed in which this nation was embroiled, our chiefest supports would be at the mercy of the enemy, the truth is that there is no enemy and none is expected. This nation in a measure is unlike the countries of Europe, by reason of its complete freedom of habitable and tillable territory, its isolation, the greatness of its natural resources and of its people. And we are great because of the manifestation, in some small measure, of our love which has more than once led us to assist a sister people rather than to override her. Love manifests itself in service and we seek, or if not, we should seek, to mind our own business and help the other fellow when we can. This war bugaboo is nothing but the offspring of fear. What we fear, we prepare for, but it usually finds us just the same, even if not quite so disastrously. And what, pray, is fear? It is simply fear of fear, a mere mental phantom. It is not love and in its wake come all things opposite to the attendants of love. You can love love but love of fear is ill. Let us prepare ourselves for peace, and for the fruits of peace by permitting the Prince of Peace to manifest in our individual and national life the rule of His heart and hand, which is love.

And God is Love. This is the law and the prophets.

Very truly yours,
C. H. BARKER.

MOUNT VERNON, FROM A SIDE VIEW

The Virginia Home of Washington on the Banks of the Potomac—A View of the Old House, Lawn, and Offices by No Means So Frequently Seen as Some Others Which Are Familiar to Most Americans.

DEVOUT, SINCERE CHRISTIAN MAN

Washington's Religion Always Without Ostentation, but Never for a Moment to Be Doubted.

Dr. Stephen A. Northrup, pastor of the Central Temple of Kansas City, Kan., compiled from the records of historians and the letters of friends some interesting data concerning the Christian life and character of George Washington.

WITHOUT making ostentatious profession of religion, Washington was a sincere believer in the Christian religion, and a truly devout man.—Chief Justice Marshall in "Life of Washington," under direction of Associate Justice Bushrod Washington.

Whenever General Washington could be spared from camp on Lord's day he never failed to ride out to some neighboring church to join those who were publicly worshipping God.—Judge Harrison, one of President Washington's secretaries.

It was the habit of General Washington to read the Scriptures and pray with his regiment on Sunday in the absence of the chaplain. . . . It fell to Washington, by striking coincidence—the chaplain being wounded—to read the funeral service at the burial of General Braddock at Green

Pohick Church Near Mount Vernon, of Which George Washington Was a Member.

Meadows.—Colonel Temple, one of Washington's aids from King William's County, Virginia.

On Sundays, unless the weather was uncommonly severe, the president and Mrs. Washington attended divine services at Christ church, Philadelphia; and in the evenings the president would read to Mrs. Washington a sermon or some portion of the sacred Scripture.—Mrs. Custis of Arlington.

True to his own country, true to himself, fearing God, believing in Christ, no stranger to private devotion or public worship, or to the holiest offices of the church to which he belonged, he ever gratefully recognized divine aid and direction in all that he accomplished.—"Biography of Washington," Appleton's Cyclopaedia of American Biography.

Incidentally I have witnessed Washington's private devotions in his library both morning and evening; on these occasions I have seen him in a kneeling posture with his Bible open before him; such was his daily practice.—Robert Lewis, nephew of Washington and his private secretary.

It was his uniform practice to retire at a certain hour for devotion of the closet. He was not one of those who act and pray that they may be seen of men. He communed with God in secret. When my aunt, Miss Custis, died suddenly at Mount Vernon before they could realize the event, he knelt by her side and prayed most fervently.—Eleanor Parke Custis, President and Mrs. Washington's adopted daughter.

I never knew so constant an attendant at church as Washington; his behavior in the house of God was ever so deeply reverential that it produced the happiest effect on my congregation, and greatly assisted me in my pulpit labors. No company ever withheld him from church. I have often been at Mount Vernon on Sunday morning, when his breakfast table was surrounded with guests; instead of staying at home out of false complaisance.

Attained Greatness Early. Washington was military commander of a whole territory—at the age of nineteen.

Dangers of a Cold. Do you know that of all the minor ailments colds are by far the most dangerous? It is not the colds themselves that you need to fear, but the serious disease that they so often lead to. For that reason every cold should be gotten rid of with the least possible delay. To accomplish this you will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy of great help to you. It loosens a cold, relieves the lungs, aids expectoration and enables the system to throw off the cold. For sale by all dealers.—Adv.

Cough Medicine for Children. Never give a child a cough medicine that contains opium in any form. When opium is given other and more serious diseases may follow. Long experience has demonstrated that there is no better or safer medicine for coughs, colds and croup in children than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is equally valuable for adults. Try it. It contains no opium or other harmful drug. For sale by all dealers.—Adv.

sance to them he used to constantly invite them to accompany him.—Rev. Lee Massey, rector of the Polish church, where President and Mrs. Washington were members.

George Washington was eminent for piety as for patriotism. In private he was known to have been habitually devout. In principle and practice he was a Christian. The support of his church in the vicinity of Mount Vernon rested largely upon him, and when on his estate he with constancy attended public worship. During the war he not infrequently rode ten or twelve miles from camp to divine worship, and he never omitted this attendance when opportunity afforded. . . . In the establishment of his presidential household he reserved to himself Lord's days, free from the interruption of private visits, or public business, and throughout the eight years of his civil administration he gave to Christianity the influence of his example.—See Bancroft's "Life of Washington."

WASHINGTON MAN OF MONEY Owned Much Real Estate, as Well as Slaves and Bank and Canal Stock.

In the schedule of property which Washington appended to his will it is shown that he owned 50,900 acres of land and a number of lots in Washington, Alexandria and Winchester, his real estate being valued at $489,135. He owned much bank and canal stock. Some of his heirs, about one thousand six hundred of them, are now trying to get Congress to put up money for immense tracts of land left by Washington in Ohio. He owned about two hundred slaves and frequently lashed them. Josiah Quincy, who lived many years with the Custis family, said "Washington did not own slaves for pleasure; he worked them for all they were worth and if they were not out on time in the morning they must have a good reason for it."

Mr. Custis often said that General Washington could get more work out of a slave than any other man in Virginia, but all his slaves loved him. A negro house boy who did not black his boots to suit him said Washington "lammed me ober de half wid em all thru de hall"

Old-Time Celebrations. Even in George Washington's lifetime his birthday was made the occasion of rejoicing by his neighbors in Alexandria. A feature of the celebration last year was the reading of an account in an Alexandria newspaper printed in 1799 of the birthday celebration that year. General Washington attended this celebration and reviewed the soldiers who had assembled to do him honor. In the evening a banquet was held. The Alexandria newspaper says that the "wines were such as did honor to their preparers, and were perfectly satisfactory to the guests. The toasts were evincive of the spirit of the day; and from a criterion whereby the northern states may judge of the federalism of the town of Alexandria." Sixteen toasts were drunk and "the evening was concluded by a ball and supper given at Mr. Gadsby's."

George—Humph! How am I ever goin' to break into history with this dinky ten-cent hatchet?

All Reverence Washington. Our nation is composed of many and varied racial elements, each with its own traditions, its own history, its own past great; yet all unite to do reverence to Washington. And so long as Americans do not forget to honor Washington the liberty of American citizenship is in no danger at the hands of would-be imperialists.

The purpose of this issue is to retire floating indebtedness and does not increase the present debt of the company.

Subject to $200,000 underlying bonds, for the retirement of which sufficient bonds of this issue are reserved, this issue is secured by a first mortgage on all the real and personal property of the company with the exception of the company's quick assets.

The property of the company is worth over $18,000,000 or more than nine times the amount of this loan.

The constituent companies of the Brier Hill Steel Company have a record of efficient service and profitable business dating back to 1859.

Net earnings of the Brier Hill Steel Company and of the constituent companies over the last seven years have averaged many times the interest charges on these bonds.

In addition to its real estate and plants in and near Youngstown, The Brier Hill Steel Company has valuable holdings of coal in Pennsylvania and ore in the Mesaba and Cayuna ranges.

Its net quick assets are more than equal to the amount of this issue and must at all times be at least equal to the amount of bonds outstanding.

Having sold a large part of these bonds we offer the unsold balance subject to confirmation and prior sale.
